THE AMERICAN BADGER.

By Robert North Bradbury.

In this picture, Bill and Bob are making the search for the hunt of the AMERICAN BADGER. They locate his borough in the little side wall of a small gully and at once make preparations to set a trap for Mr. Badger. When it is set, they make special preparations with the Cameraman and after a three day vigil are rewarded by showing the action displayed by the animal when caught, and from his borough until finally, the third day overconfidence causes the downfall by the weary brute and the picture is taken as he deliberately puts his foot in the clutches of the trap. His capture assured, the boys' next move is to secure him and then release him from the trap. All this is shown in an interesting and instructive manner and no unusual pain or injury is inflicted during the operation and we see the captive led back to the camp and toddling on his own feet.
